welcome to 1985 at BYU

Editor's note:

In some ways, a lot has happened in the last 15 years.

In other ways, things are pretty much the same.

This Flashback issue is dedicated to 1985. That year represents the height of the 80s and all the radical joys it encompassed: the neon, the bangs, the short pants, the music, the slang and the transition.

So whether you were still in pre-school, or if you had already conquered five years of elementary school, hopefully you will be able to reminisce and maybe learn a little.

See related stories on pages 2, 5, 7, 8 and 11.

Social activities were a big part of the BYU scene. See stories about 1985 on pages 2, 5, 7, 8 and 11.

1985 a year of growth, changes for LDS Church

By Greg Bennett
NewsNet Staff Writer

In one of the most eventful years in the recent history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1985 saw a range of events spanning from a BYU football national title in early January to the death of President Spencer W. Kimball in November.

President Kimball's death, on Nov. 5, 1985, marked the end of an important chapter of the LDS Church. President Kimball had served as president of the church since Dec. 30, 1973. He oversaw the dedication of the church's 26-story office building in Salt Lake City, the completion of a topical guide for the scriptures and received revelation in 1978 that would allow worthy men of all races to receive the priesthood.

For many young members of the church, President Kimball's death brought a sense of loss intensified by the fact that they could not remember any other president of the church.

Brett Pyne, associate director of athletic media relations at BYU, was a missionary in Italy at the time of President Kimball's death and remembers the feeling of loss many members shared.

"President Kimball had been the prophet for a long time," Pyne said. "He was the only prophet a lot of us had known. It was the first time any of us had gone through this at all. It didn't have a negative effect on missionary work. In fact, it gave us more of a chance to teach about the organization of the church."

Pyne also said he remembers being with the grandson of President Ezra Taft Benson, who became president of the church the day after President Kimball died.

Michael Taft Benson, President Benson's grandson, was also a missionary in Italy with Pyne in 1985.

"I remember he was crying," Pyne said. "I think it was just because he knew President Kimball personally and was sad about the death of the prophet. I do remember thinking that he was lucky because he received letters from the prophet."

According to the Deseret News 1995-1996 Church Almanac, the church had 5.91 million members at the end of 1985. Since then, church membership has nearly doubled to approximately 11 million members.

At the end of 1985, there were 37 operating temples, compared to today's 78 temples in operation.

One of the temples operating at the end of 1985 was the Freiberg Germany Temple which was dedicated in seven sessions from June 20-30 by President Gordon B. Hinckley, who was then a member of the First Presidency.

The dedication of the Freiberg Temple was significant in part because it was located in the Commu-

Colombian churches bombed, LDS officials report no injuries

By Beverly Beal

Officials from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are working with local law enforcement agencies in the investigation of four church bombings in southwestern Colombia on Tuesday.

The damages were minimal and there were no injuries.

"We are saddened to learn that four of our chapels have been slightly damaged by terrorist bombs in Colombia. Gratefully, the explosions caused no injuries. Such misdirected attacks do nothing but temporarily deprive Colombian citizens of a place to worship God as their conscience directs," said Dale Bills, a spokesman for the LDS Church.

A Deseret News report said police blamed the National Liberation Army (ELN), Colombia's second-largest rebel force, for targeting the LDS churches in Cali.

Police said they believe that the ELN, influenced by radical Roman Catholic priests, attacked the churches in protest against what they see as excessive U.S. involvement in Colombia.

The church has not decided whether to remove missionaries or church personnel from the area, said Kim Farah, LDS Church spokeswoman.

In September 1988, internal political difficulties led to withdrawal of North American missionaries in the country, according to the Deseret News 1999-2000 Church Almanac.

Missionary work has since continued, and the LDS Colombia Barranquilla mission was created. Three other stakes have also been added to that area.

Despite these problems, membership grew from 83,000 in 1990 to around 129,000 members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints currently living in Colombia.

Colombia has 24 stakes and four missions, which include Colombia Cali, Colombia Bogota, Colombia Bogota North and Colombia Barranquilla, according to the church almanac.

Reno personally intervenes in Fla.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Attorney General Janet Reno headed to Miami on Wednesday, intervening personally to persuade Elian Gonzalez's great-uncle to hand the boy over and end the wrenching 4 1/2-month custody case.

Reno, taking a dramatic step toward arranging a peaceful transfer, planned to meet with the Miami relatives who have cared for Elian since two men on a fishing trip pulled him from the sea on Thanksgiving Day.

"She's planning to work out a resolution, trying to meet with the parties concerned to seek a cooperative settlement," Justice Department spokesman Myron Marlin announced.

Armando Gutierrez, a spokesman for the Miami relatives, called her trip "a good sign." Reno had no plans to personally deliver the government letter outlining how the transfer to Elian's father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, will take place.

U.S. offers nuclear workers relief

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration Wednesday unveiled a broad package of compensation for ailing workers who were exposed to radiation at the country's nuclear bomb factories during the Cold War.

"We are moving forward to do the right thing for these workers," Energy Secretary Bill Richardson said. "The government is, for a change, on their side, not against them."

The plan will offer lump-sum payments of at least $100,000 to workers or their survivors, or allow them to negotiate a package that would cover medical costs, lost wages and job retraining.

While it is unclear how many people would be affected, the Energy Department has estimated that about 3,000 former nuclear weapons plant workers, or their families, are likely to be eligible because of exposure to radiation from the '50s through the '70s.

Cost of the program, which needs Congress' approval, is estimated at $120 million annually for the first three years, declining to $80 million a year after that.

Israel accepts early U.S involvement

JERUSALEM — In a concession to the Palestinians, Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak accepted President Clinton's proposal to increase U.S. involvement ahead of a May deadline for a peace treaty outline, a senior Israeli official said Wednesday.

Barak's agreement was elicited during a quick visit to Washington at Clinton's behest, said the official in Barak's delegation, who spoke on condition of anonymity aboard Israel Air Force One.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat complained this week that the most recent round of U.S.-sponsored talks has not come up with anything concrete. Arafat is demanding Israel agree to a Palestinian state on the West Bank and in Gaza with part of Jerusalem as its capital. He has accused Barak of taking an "extremist" position.

The sides are still deadlocked over final borders, the future of Jerusalem and the status of refugees.

Ben & Jerry's acquires new owner

MONTPELIER, Vt. — Ben & Jerry's, the hippie-capitalist ice cream maker, is selling out to corporate suits.

Unilever, the multinational conglomerate that makes such products as Wisk detergent, Q-tips and Popsicles, is paying $326 million for the company started by two ex-hippies in an old gas station in 1978.

The Ben & Jerry's deal announced Wednesday would bring the socially conscious maker of funky ice cream flavors like Chunky Monkey and Cherry Garcia under the same corporate umbrella as Good Humor and Breyers ice cream.

It was an outcome neither Ben Cohen nor Jerry Greenfield favored. But the two founders were under pressure from shareholders to sell to Unilever, which offered $43.60 per share, or nearly 25 percent over Ben Jerry's closing price Tuesday of $34.93 3/4. "While we and others certainly would have pursued our mission as an independent enterprise, we hope that, as part of Unilever, Ben & Jerry's will continue to expand its role in society," Cohen and Greenfield said in a statement.

nist-ruled German Democratic Republic, or East Germany.

Although missionaries were not allowed into the country at that time, many who lived there were members of the church before World War II divided the country.

Ryan Jensen, a graduate student from Huntsville, Weber County, majoring in English, served a mission in Germany. Jensen said the temple in East Germany was good for more than just political reasons.

"It wasn't just that the government allowed the church to build the temple there," Jensen said. "It was significant because it let those members who had been isolated from the rest of the world for so many years see that the church had not forgotten them."

Within four years of the temple building, the East German government allowed missionaries to begin proselyting in the country for the first time since 1938.

On Nov. 9, 1989, the Berlin Wall fell and in less than a year the two Germanys were reunited.

On November 26, 1984, the First Presidency of the LDS Church announced the term of full-time missionary service for elders would go back to two years. The term had been reduced to 18 months in 1982.

Pyne, who served in Italy from October 1984 to October 1986, remembers when the announcement was made, and explained that the announcement enced missionaries a gr

Crabtree stands as a monument to technol

By Kris Boyle

The 1980s was a decade known for many technological advances, and BYU wasn't about to be left behind.

At the beginning of 1985, the College of Engineering and Technology was spread out between several different buildings on campus.

"You were going to five different buildings to teach classes," said Kent Kohkonen, professor in the School of Technology.

But by the close of the year, a new technology building became part of the BYU campus.

Elder Boyd K. Packer, a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, dedicated the Roland A. Crabtree Technology Building on October 29, 1985.

According to Kohkonen, previous to the construction of the Crabtree Building engineering and technology classes were held in the William H. Snell Building, the W.W. Clyde Engineering Building, the technology building behind the Snell building and two temporary buildings where the Crabtree Building now stands.

As part of the Crabtree Building's dedication ceremony, a Rhino Robot was designed to cut the ribbon on the new building.

flash back

"It is unusual, yet fitting, that we should officially open the building in this manner," then-BYU president Jeffrey R. Holland said at the dedication ceremony.

The building was named after Roland A. Crabtree because of the contributions he and his wife made for its construction, said L. Douglas Smoot, a professor in the Chemical Engineering Department.

Elder Packer paid tribute to Crabtree during the dedication ceremony.

"He symbolizes the image of all the ordinary members of the LDS Church who give so willingly to the growth of the LDS Church and its education system," Elder Packer said.

Smoot, who was the dean of the College of Engineering and Technology from 1977 to 1994, said there was a desperate need, particularly from the different technology programs, for another building at the time of the Crabtree's construction.

"This building provided a new home, a wonderful home for these programs," he said.

Robert Todd, a professor of mechanical engineering, is a member of the engineering accreditation commission, which sends its members all over the country to accredits schools.

Todd says the Crabtree Building is one of the best buildi seen.

"It's the finest buildi kind in the nation," Todd

He also said the buildi newest of the three b used for engineering and ogy. The other two are u and Snell Buildings.

Todd said the Crabtree was designed primarily ty members working at the time.

"I have never seen a bu nice as this building for ing theory and practice,"

Smoot said that since ing of the building, the ing and engineering te programs have becom integrated.

The Crabtree Building levels and contains assignable square feet, a commons area, 23 la rooms, 30 offices, thr rooms and a multi-medi rium.

DAQ plunged 500-plus points on April 4, taking a heavy toll on technology stocks, before recovering by the day's end.

"If you didn't think it was going to happen, you probably haven't been paying attention," said Drew Kliber, a financial consultant for Solomon Smith Barney in Salt Lake City.

"I think it's very healthy. It's going to weed out a lot of the speculators and it's probably going to take some of these companies that don't have such a great business plan," Kliber said.

St. George-based Skywest Airlines, which trades on the NASDAQ, gained nearly three dollars a share Tuesday, just a day after the index tumbled six percent.

Mike Kraupp, vice-president of finance and controller for Skywest, said the correction is opening investors' eyes to the stability of companies like his that have solid fundamentals.

"They can see the growth rate that's coming over the next couple of years," Kraupp said. "And you're seeing some of the longer term investors, on the buy side, that are interested in our stock."

Many industry insiders see the price fluctuations as a ripple in the wave of success for technology stocks in the future.

Orem-based Caldera Systems, which markets Linux-based software solutions, went public with its initial stock offering on March 21. Caldera's chief financial officer, Alan Hansen, said he's not worried by the correction.

"The hot space right now is e-business infrastructure and e-commerce solutions. And tech companies that provide these solutions are certainly in the sweet spot in the market," Hansen said.

"Ultimately, however, no matter how leading-edge or bleeding-edge your technology or solution is, if you don't have the right management team in place it's still going to be difficult to succeed," he said.

Rip Bains, investor relations manager for Park City-based Digital Courier Tech, said he sees the roller-coaster prices as a big game.

"It's people getting worried for no reason. It's like a snowball effect. People come out with negative comments and they think the whole world is going to end," Bains said. "And when the stocks come down, guess who's buying them? It's these people who made the negative comments."

He said much of the sell-off stems from a need for people to pay their taxes as the Monday filing deadline approaches.

BYU graduate Joe Cook, an independent NASDAQ equities trader in New York, sees the sell-off as a perfect time to buy.

Israel, China arms deal runs into U.S. pressure

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Under U.S. pressure to cancel a lucrative arms deal with China, Israel welcomed Chinese President Jiang Zemin on a historic visit Wednesday to the Jewish state, cementing ties first forged in secret nearly two decades ago.

The high-profile recognition of Israel by one of the world's major powers was seen as strong proof here that the days of diplomatic isolation are over for good. However, the new status also brought new problems for Israel, such as juggling the divergent interests of its strongest ally and a powerful friend.

Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak welcomed Jiang less than 24 hours after meeting at the White House with President Clinton, who urged the Israeli leader to cancel the planned sale of a sophisticated airborne surveillance system to China.

Clinton expressed deep displeasure and warned that the deal, potentially worth $2 billion, could undermine Israel's standing in the United States, said an Israeli official who attended Tuesday's White House summit. Danny Yatom, Barak's top policy adviser, said the U.S. Congress was "very worried" about the sale.

Israel's deputy defense minister, Ephraim Sneh, said Israel was committed to selling at least one surveillance plane to China, which reportedly has the option to order three to seven more. Israeli officials have suggested that after the first plane is sold, the deal could be frozen indefinitely to appease the United States.

Sneh said that in the competitive international arms market, "there are no friends." Describing U.S. pressure on Israel as a "steamroller," he scoffed at U.S. complaints that the sale could upset the military balance in Asia and pose a threat to Taiwan, a U.S. ally.

Jiang arrived in Israel on Wednesday afternoon for a six-day visit, the first by a Chinese president to Israel. The countries established diplomatic relations in 1992, but secret ties go back to the early 1980s when Israel began selling arms to China.

His first stop was a reception by Israeli President Ezer Weizman. Describing Israel and China as ancient nations, Jiang said it was important to "strengthen the historical friendship between us ... and to promote friendly and mutually beneficial cooperation in various fields between the two countries."

During his visit, Jiang will hold talks with Barak and Israeli lawmakers, visit Yad Vashem, Israel's Holocaust memorial, and tour two communal farms in the Negev Desert to inspect agricultural projects. On Saturday, he will meet Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat in the West Bank town of Bethlehem.

A planned visit to Israel Aircraft Industries, which is outfitting a Soviet transport plane with the new PHALCON surveillance system, has reportedly been canceled to avoid drawing more attention to the deal.

Barak faces a difficult dilemma over the sale.

He needs Clinton's goodwill at a critical stage in the peace talks with the Palestinians and a planned Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon, due by July.

However, Barak also has to protect Israel's defense industry. About 70 percent of the military equipment produced in Israel is exported, and China has emerged as a major client, said Gerald Steinberg, an expert on the Israeli defense industry.

Sneh told Israel radio that in the past the United States has "brutally thrown Israel out" of other international arms markets.

area of concern was determining circumstances where council members would be required to recuse, or withdraw themselves from voting on issues.

"Right now we have nothing of a recusal except a person's conscience," Mayor Jerry Washburn said.

Council members agreed they should dismiss themselves from voting on issues that will provide direct financial interest for themselves or a member of their immediate family.

The state ethical code includes any relative, instead of only the immediate family, but Orem council members thought that was too extreme.

"We have to remember that we're trying not to be ridiculous in what we do here," Council Member Mike Thompson said.

The council members agreed that too many specific rules might become foolish and contribute to an atmosphere of worry and nitpicking instead of cultivating true integrity.

"We've got to make sure that we don't get ourselves innocently into trouble," Council Member Stephen E. Sandstrom said.

Sandstrom was adamant that the word "direct" precedes "personal financial interest" in the document.

Sandstrom wanted to avoid situations where people could pinpoint innocent behavior as rule-breaking years later.

"If I end up getting hired by a company I voted for some years before, I don't want people to point fingers," Sandstrom said.

The Council also asked Johnson to draft a section on general harassment that can be amended to the document in the future.

The section will not include sexual harassment, but will focus on problems like threats, stalking and vulgarity.

Johnson made it clear to the Council that most of the guidelines discussed are not enforceable, but can be used to check their own behaviors.

Change is difficult amid student population

It is said that history repeats itself.

It is also said that we should learn from history.

In the spirit of today's Daily Universes flashback to 1985, some editors looked back at old letters to the editor from 15 years ago. Housing woes, parking perils, fashion disputes and students' frustrations with the disrespect other students show them seemed to be running themes then — and now.

But with a student body population that changes more or less each semester, the same issues are addressed year after year because many do not realize how often these issues have been addressed. Letters are often received urging BYU students to write about something new and, that basically, the same letters are written in 2000 as they were in years past. But it is not the resurrection of past issues that is problematic. It is the lack of solutions actually taking root that is the problem.

While some debates are better abandoned (case in point: the Californians vs. Utahns debate — people are different. Neither side is better), some recurring student issues should be resolved. Unfortunately, students do not stick around long enough to effect change. Last week, a Daily Universe editorial addressed the fleeting population's lack of teeth in resolving housing problems. But similarly, lack of effective parking, abundance of technology glitches, frequency of students cutting across the grass, lack of recycling in Utah, and other recurring issues seem only to be increasing as the student body grows and becomes aware of the same problems addressed in the past but never remedied. But while numbers of students increase, the short amount of time these students remain in the BYU community remains the same.

While this may seem a hopeless cycle, this repetition of history can be curbed.

Students should be commended for their perception of these issues and for keeping administration and city officials aware of the lack of action. However, it must be carried to the next level. If students want to effect change, they must do more than just complain. Form committees, take issues to city council meetings, volunteer to head a cause.

Deep-rooted involvement may be difficult for transient students, and they may not even reap the fruits of their labors. But today's students can make BYU and Provo a better place for students to come by choosing to get involved to resolve issues during their time here.

If time has run out on a student's BYU experience, he or she should aim to make this commitment to the communities he or she will be a part of. For those students staying in Provo, don't procrastinate bettering this community. Your actions can have positive repercussions on students to come.

Hopefully, through awareness coupled with action, the future flashback issues of The Daily Universe can boast change and innovation, rather than dragged-out debates and the relentless cycling of problems.

This editorial is the opinion of The Daily Universe Editorial Board. Daily Universe opinions are not necessarily the opinions of BYU, its administrators or The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The ring-by-spring money back guarantee

Sarah Hartsfield

Special to The Daily Universe

Last Friday, I went to the Senior Celebration. All I can say is, I have never received so much free stuff in my life as I did at that party.

I still need to show some men in my ward the loot. They'd be so proud. They thrive on free stuff. In fact, two of them actually went around our complex asking for free stuff for the birthday of their roommate, the king of free stuff. Their loot included, most notably, a suitcase and a brassiere. I think if I ever saw them pay full price (or any price) for anything I would die of shock.

But aside from the bounteous party prizes at the celebration, I don't think I have ever seen so many married couples and families in my life either. I felt very young and uncomfortable. I'm used to not fitting the norm, being disabled and having to navigate around people on my wheelchair I lovingly call Nellie. But despite these differences, I really felt out of place among all the BYU married students.

Am I fooling myself? How can I actually be graduating from BYU single and 21 years old? Some of the seniors probably have kids as old as I am.

Once I returned from the party, I checked my AIM report and was reminded of my senior status. Yup, I really was graduating. I sighed with relief and closed my eyes, dreaming of a life without the Testing Center, homework and late-night cram sessions.

But wait a minute. I'm single and I'm graduating. Don't I get my tuition back? Isn't it a well-known fact that BYU has a "ring by spring or your money back" guarantee? I can safely say I will not get a ring by next Thursday's graduation ceremony, so I want my money. If anything, that money would help to make me more attractive to the opposite sex, increasing my chances of joining the ever-growing married crowd.

So, how do I get this money? Do I write a letter to President Bateman? Or should I go straight to the top? I'm sure President Hinckley wants to hear my marital woes (or more appropriately, non-marital woes), and if anyone is authorized to give me my money back it would be him.

The exact amount I should receive remains in question, however. Do I get reimbursed for all the tuition I spent here, or just for this year? It would be a sizable amount of cash any way you cut it. I think I'm entitled to a full refund, but I'll take what I can get.

I know I am not alone out there. There are others in the same plight I am in and will be cap-and-gowning it without a significant other. If we band together to demand our refund, ringless hand in ringless hand, the administration is bound to listen.

I think this is worth a shot. Besides, my boys would be proud if we succeeded. More free stuff!

Fight Club degrading

Dear Editor:

My heart sank last year when I opened a Daily Universe to be shocked by a picture of a motorcyclist's head trapped under a car's axle, but with Monday's story of the Provo Fight Club, I felt my heart break. Please don't participate in voyeurism. It is a monster whose appetite grows with each feeding.

I don't understand why people would want to watch this. I don't understand why The Daily Universe would take pictures, give it a voice and tell people how to find it. Is it all right to hurt people if it is for recreation rather than hate? Christ taught us to love and care for each other. Satan wants us to destroy each other. He hates everything about us especially our bodies. How can anyone support such a thing as Fight Club knowing that God is real and that we are all his children? Please stop this club.

I don't understand why The Daily Universe would quote anonymous sources. Why would you allow foolish reasoning to persuade readers and attempt to justify those who try to hide the things they do? Inappropriate media do affect us. It is Satan's voice and is the temple for his teachings. It has obviously enabled him tragically to inspire a few to watch and smile while others willfully hurt each other without remorse in the name of happiness. It has allowed him to destroy natural affection and compassion in the hearts of a few.

If you are a part of the Provo Fight Club, please stop. If you've been to see it, don't go again. If we cut the fuel the fire will burn out.

A different recognition

Dear Editor:

We have volunteered the past two years for a BYUSA service program called Unified Sports. This program brings local children with Down's syndrome, their siblings and their parents to BYU every Saturday to participate in athletic activities. The results were incredible. Athletes from the men's and women's volleyball, gymnastics, swimming, diving and basketball teams, as well as the Swing Kids, Cougarettes, cheerleaders, men's soccer and football teams spent Saturdays coaching and playing with these kids, making a difference in each child's life.

We are amazed at the willingness of these athletes to devote their time and talents to these children. Every week, the athletes enthusiastically worked with the children, bringing them into the spotlight while not once shying away from them because of their disabilities.

Often we read in the newspaper or hear on television about the athletic accomplishments of the athletes who represent BYU. But we hardly ever hear of their outstanding character, goodwill and willingness to serve without the thought of anything in return.

Building friendships

Dear Editor:

In the Freshman BYU Academy, new students can live on the same floor with other people taking their same classes.

My freshman year I had History of Civilization with others on my floor. Our whole floor knew each other, and we were always planning activities and doing things together. The academy and the unity and friendship it provided assisted in strengthening the spirituality of our ward. If we support this program by telling our future freshmen friends about it, I believe it will not only help with grades, but also help unify the college even more.

Lost but not found

Dear Editor:

Here on BYU campus we enjoy many services, one of which is the Lost and Found. To me it's simply remarkable that a person can leave something practically anywhere on campus and know exactly where it should eventually end up.

I bring this up is because almost two months ago, I left my scriptures in a classroom in the law building. My scriptures are still missing, despite my daily efforts at locating them. I haven't seriously considered theft as a possibility because I can't see what a fellow BYU student would want with my scriptures. Somewhere along the line, the Lost and Found chain was broken.

The Lost and Found is a great system as long as everyone does his or her part. Exercise common sense and consideration for people like me who misplace things now and again. If you notice something left in a room or on campus, either leave it be because the person might be coming back for it, or take a few minutes and drop it off at the Lost and Found in the Wilkinson Student Center.

Point of evaluations?

Dear Editor:

What is the point of teacher evaluations? I have become so good at filling them out that I don't even have to read the questions anymore. Do they really serve a purpose? Do people really look and evaluate the results? And if so, who? Or are they a way for the university to make the students think their opinions and suggestions are being listened to? Just recently, in one of my classes the teacher informed us that it does not matter if we fill out all of the evaluation, the only part of the evaluation they look at is the rating.

In addition to questions about the class and instructor, the evaluation sheets also ask if the instructor ties in gospel principles. I understand this is a church-sponsored university, but I don't think teachers should be evaluated on whether or not they talk about gospel principles. Obviously in religion classes and some other classes the instructor can easily tie in these principles, but there are some that they cannot. Many classes I have attended go the entire semester without any talk of gospel principles, but when the semester comes to an end and it's time to pass out those evaluations, the instructor is suddenly bearing his testimony. If the teacher wants to score high on this part of the evaluation, do it through the entire semester.

Students not the pro

Dear Editor:

Provo City's recent decision to m owner occupancy as a condition re ing a basement apartment in t neighborhoods has aroused mu sionate debate. Many students, o seem unaware that this change g directed at students, was not a re dislike of students and will not pu dents out of the neighborhood. R welcome the 37 percent of the nei hood who are renters and value u tributions they make. Thus, we pr proposed a change that would ni students. We surveyed the occup all 650 homes in our neighborho found that even in the worst s only 40 of 910 renters would placed after three years.

Students need to know these fa change will help keep these ne hoods as desirable places to live student renters and families. Article not convinc

Dear Editor:

After reading Monday's article ing off-campus housing, I'm still vinced that rent really isn't that dents really are satisfied wi dwellings, students really do get their money. This isn't the case.

I love the idea of BYU-approv ing. I love the high standards of and moral conduct that are s thankful for the concern the u has for our living conditions. B the idea and the reality of BYU-a housing are not one in the same.

I transferred from Florida S semester where I lived in a tw apartment with my own room. out here to an apartment with co price, square feet and location, a up squished into a dump with fi girls. My roommates and I p $1,300 a month combined for r with various miscellaneous e such as carpet cleaning and spaces. We even have to pay certain repairs. I asked the man for the address of the owner refused to give it to me. They o forward my letter, but I opte waste my time on something th most likely end up in the trash.

I work for my rent. I expect th of my apartment to be somewhat what I pay for it. The landlords a us for a ride. Do the students University of Michigan and Ch State have six-person apartm brown water? Do they pay for a tioning that doesn't work or refrigerator shelves made out o hangers? I think not. They may same amount as us but I highly quality is comparable. Next time is conducted, let me have a shot

While girls at that time typically had Cabbage Patch Kids, boys typically collected Garbage Pail Kids.

While some '80s elementary school trends lasted into the year 2000, Topps Chewing Gum stopped making Garbage Pail Kids in 1988 due to declining sales and a copyright infringement lawsuit brought by the makers of Cabbage Patch Kids.

The lawsuit called for Topps to change Garbage Pail Kids' appearance because they looked too much like Cabbage Patch Kids.

Since Topps stopped making the cards, they are now worth more than three times what they sold for originally. During the years of production, a pack of five cards and the included stick of gum went for 25 cents.

According to Wayne's Garbage Pail Kids Web site, as well as auctioning sites like eBay, a first series single card is now worth $2.00 and a complete set which includes all 88 first series cards is worth $170.

Matt Stafford runs the Garbage Pail Kids Web site at www.garbagepailkids.com. He said he collected the cards when he was 10 years old and that they consumed his life for about a year and a half. At 23, he has rediscovered them. He recently bought a first series set on eBay.

"Before I knew it, the bug had hit me again," Stafford said. "I started bidding on anything and everything I could find. (The) funny thing is that I now have more (Garbage Pail Kids) stuff as an adult than I ever did as a kid."

Genualdi, a 24-year-old who has collected the cards since sixth grade, says Pokemon cards will never make a comeback like Garbage Pail Kids have.

"Out of all of the non-sports sets that I've seen, there aren't any that are better than Garbage Pail Kids," Genualdi said.

Because of the accessibility of the computers, even those who do not have a degree in computer science have started up their own Web sites.

Adam Lisonbee, 22, a junior from Orem majoring in film, recently started up www.Provolife.com, a Web site dedicated to letting students know the parties and events happening in Provo. He said starting up a Web site with no experience and little money would not even have been an option in 1985.

"Web sites didn't even exist except for very smart guys who were nuts, crazy, insane and who watched Star Trek. It is amazing that a regular guy could do this and communicate to thousands of students," Lisonbee said.

Using computers to post messages was not even an idea in 1985.

News topics remain, issues change with time

By Jennifer Groskreutz
groskreutz@newsroom.byu.edu
Associate NewsNet Special Sections Editor

Abortion, AIDS and OPEC were some of the world and national issues in 1985.

Fifteen years later, one can find those topics covered on several pages of major newspapers, such as The New York Times.

However, the coverage of such topics between then and now is different.

A story in The New York Times that ran Jan. 11, 1985 talked about a violence warning issued to all abortion clinics by the federal government.

"The federal government has issued a warning that is going to abortion clinics and medical offices around the country of a potential for violence Jan. 20-22," the article said.

It went on that "30 instances of bombing, firebombing and arson at abortion clinics since May 1982" had occurred.

Yet, abortion stories written in the year 2000 no longer focus on the issue of violence in clinics.

A new aspect has entered the abortion arena. In The Detroit News on March 26, 2000 a story ran about new legislation aimed at lowering the abortion rate.

Sen. Shirley Johnson, R-Calif., has started a bill "which would protect women from criminal charges for dropping off their babies at a fire or police station or a hospital," according to the article.

The article said Johnson was prompted to take action after an 18-year-old mother was charged with manslaughter for the death of her newborn baby.

Of course, abortion is not the only topic that has been faced with new issues over the last 15 years.

On Jan.11, 1985 The Washington Post ran a story in which the Department of Health and Human Services announced that a test to detect the AIDS virus in blood would soon be "commercially available."

That same day a story ran in The New York Times about a Red Cross official who canceled a lesbian blood drive.

Dr. Benjamin Spindler, director of blood service for the Orange County Red Cross chapter, was criticized for the decision.

He said he canceled the drive because he did now want to lose "the good will of other donors over the fear of contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS," the article said.

Now that the blood test mentioned in the 1985 article has been commercialized, an actual cure for the AIDS virus is underway.

A New York Times article written on March 6, 2000 states that Human Genome Sciences Inc. has "won a patent for a gene" that might not only cure those with AIDS, but it would also prevent people from contracting the disease in the first place.

And of course, students on a college budget cannot ignore the OPEC crisis.

On Jan. 27, 1985 The New York Times ran a story about an OPEC deadlock.

The 13-member group could not agree on a "new price structure for differing grades of oil, to bring them into line with the market and end price discounting," according to the article.

Surprise or no surprise, an article in the Los Angeles Times on April 4 of this year said "Gasoline prices continued to dribble lower this past week in the wake of a decision by OPEC and other oil-producing nations to increase petroleum production."

The article continued further saying that particular decline was "the second consecutive decline in U.S. and California gas prices, which have been rising since mid-January because of higher oil prices and extremely low gasoline inventories."

MOA welcomes fragile 'feast'

Light and shape share the spotlight in the latest exhibit at BYU's Museum of Art.

"Chihuly Baskets," which is free to the public, opens today and will run through Sept. 16.

"(Dale) Chihuly is the best known glass artist in the world," said Cheryll May, coordinator of public and volunteer programs for the MOA.

Dawn Pheysey, curator for the exhibit, said "the exhibition design makes it a spectacular visual feast," said.

May said Chihuly is famous for playing with organic forms and manipulating glass into bizarre shapes and colors.

"He can do things with glass that no one's even thought of doing before," she said. "His imagination just seems to be boundless."

She also said Chihuly was inspired by Indian baskets he saw at the Washington State Historical Museum in Tacoma, Wash.

According to a news release, Chihuly said of the museum pieces "I was struck by the grace of their slumped, sagging forms. I wanted to capture this grace in glass."

May said Chihuly's work is a tribute to the Northwestern Native American culture, in which woven baskets were used for a multitude of tasks.

According to Pheysey, Chihuly even works in an old-world style studio. However, since a 1976 car accident left him blind in one eye, Chihuly has carried out his work with the help of several assistants who create his glass pieces after he paints them on canvas.

The viewing and funeral of Tammy Lynn Campbell Bodrero, 27, a senior from Provo who was killed Friday in a car accident, will be this morning.

The viewing is from 10 to 11 a.m. in the Tooele 11th Ward Chapel, 180 S. Coleman in Tooele. The funeral will begin at 11 a.m. in the same chapel.

A public viewing was held last night at Tate Mortuary in Tooele.

Bodrero was traveling northbound on I-15 when she lost control of her car and crossed into southbound traffic where she was hit by an approaching semi-truck.

She died at 7:30 a.m. at Timpanogos Regional Hospital.

Bodrero was born Feb. 15, 1973, in Provo. She is the daughter of Jim and Martha Campbell and one of eight children, according to an article in the Daily Herald.

Bodrero married Jonathan Bodrero on August 13, 1999, in the Salt Lake Temple. Today is their eight-month wedding anniversary.

"She was really fun. She loved to sing and teach and serve other people. She'll be greatly missed, but her memory will live on. It just happened to be her time to be called back to our Heavenly Father," said Jonathan Bodrero.

Jonathan, 25, is a graduate student from Tooele and teaches in the BYU Math Department.

Bodrero served an LDS mission in Mendoza, Argentina and taught Spanish to new missionaries for two years after her mission. She and Jonathan served in the same mission, but did not meet and marry until later, said Betsy Bodrero, Jonathan's mother.

Bodrero was scheduled to graduate with a degree in Family Life and Home Economics and a minor in Spanish teaching this August, said Maxine Rowley, chair of the Family Life and Home Economics Depa[rt] the School of Family Li[fe]

"Tammy was very se[lf]ented. She told me on[e] want to love others an[d] understand their cultu[re] needs better,'" Rowley s[aid]

Police, fire officers plan for Olymp

When the Olympics come to Salt Lake City in 2002, Utah's Public Information Officers Association said it will be ready.

Members of the association meet every two months to discuss preparations for the Olympics.

The association includes all public information officers from the different police and fire departments throughout the state.

On Wednesday, they met to discuss how they will prepare for possible emergencies and how they will work with the 24,000 media representatives who will flock to Utah for the Olympics.

To prepare for emergencies, many members of the association are instructed at special disaster training courses sponsored by the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

These training courses put the officers in a mock disaster situation and teach them the skills they will need to be successful when faced with the real thing.

Recently, Utah had the largest population of officers at a training course in San Diego.

"We were honored as the most well-organized PIOA group in the nation," said Phil Kurt, chairman for the group. "We hope that this will reassure all Wasatch front residents that we are going to be prepared (for the Olympics)."

The association plans to send officers to Georgia this summer to see how Atlanta's emergency personnel handled the 1996 Olympics, Kurt said.

The group also plans to sponsor a training course in Park City, Summit County, some time next year, Kurt said.

The Park City Police Department will also sponsor a pre-Olympic media conference in February 2001 for all media representatives.

"We will take them to t[he] the Olympic facilities [in] Shawn Winder, public [in]tion officer for the Park [City] department.

"We will feed them an[d] entice them with some [of] stories' and tickets [to] Grizzlies game," Winder [said]

Utah's Public Info[rma]Officers Association als[o] to build a large informat[ion] ter for the Olympics, sa[id] Villa, chairman of the S[alt] City Fire Department.

This center will serv[e] information station w[ith] public safety officers c[an] with the media to "get a[ll] information out as we p[os]can," Villa said.

Members of the assoc[iation] hope to assist the media [in] they can, said Chris Kr[am] the Utah Department of [Public] Safety.

"We hope to find litt[le] nuggets to keep the [media] happy," Kramer said.

don't get me wrong here. I orts. They're important. We need them for entertainment and, let's face it, the money they generate.

But there are arguably more artists in the world than athletes, and the athletes get the coverage.

Well, enough about social injustices.

So, to help you artistically stunted cretins whom I would never want to offend, I offer you this list of awards so you can know what you missed.

• The Best Disturbing Drama-/Comedy Award goes to "The Caucasian Chalk Circle." This was not the kind of theater that Provo theaters are ever going to produce, and you who missed it really missed a wonderful experience.

• The Best Artistic Presentation of a non-BYU Approved Lifestyle Award goes to "La Traviata." If you were there, you know what I mean.

• "La Traviata" also wins the Best Singing that Requires Those Singing to Stand Absolutely Still so That They do not Explode Award. Those people could knock over a football player with the sounds rushing out of their mouths.

• Receiving the Best Cultural Experience Award is the Performing Arts Series.

With such performers as "Shashank," "Brave Old World" and "The Mandinka Epic," this series brought a diverse group of professional artists to BYU. Look for similar performances in the future.

• Sharing the Best Creative Staging Award are "Goodbye, Marianne" and "A Love Affair With Electrons." These shows proved that creativity in theater is definitely not dead.

• And, in my opinion, the Best Overall Performance Award goes to "Much Ado About Nothing." It was good. Real good. Enough said.

While I would love to award prizes for the best actor and actress, I know that would possibly cause "hurt feelings" among the performers. And, having been in a few plays myself, I know that no matter how often actors downplay it, they never like to have "hurt feelings."

So, I'll leave it this way. Aside from a few unnatural line deliveries and some mild bloopers here and there, every performer deserves a big pat on the back.

In summary, well done, you artistically-inclined people. And to you who have yet to discover the quality and power of BYU's performing arts — well — repent and get tickets for next term.

Without fail, Peart instills each tune on "Power Windows" with stellar percussion work. A new leaf turned with this album, however, is his incorporation of a new half-acoustic/half-electric drum kit that is so huge that it encircles him. The new electronic portion allows Peart to dish out high-tech sounds, as well as samples of ethnic percussion instruments from around the world. To hear how intriguing it turns out, check out "Territories" and "Mystic Rhythms."

While many guitar fans moaned and groaned at the more ethereal, less-bombastic role Lifeson's guitar playing took on "Power Windows," he deserves kudos for having the maturity, foresight and adventurous spirit to explore more textural approaches that serve the songwriting direction Rush was headed in at the time. Besides, there are still great solos, not to mention the funky rhythms and cool Oriental-tinged parts he adds to several tunes.

In all, "Power Windows" offers a fascinating look into mid-80s consciousness, while documenting a transitional period for one of rock's most influential, least understood bands. If you like music and lyrics that push the envelope and make you think, give "Power Windows" a listen.

2000's entertainment mirrors 1985's

Madonna has a new movie and is topping the pop music charts. Phil Collins is winning awards and selling albums like crazy. Tina Turner stalks the music scene. "Star Wars" movies are raking in the dough.

Wait a minute. What year is it? Strangely enough, it's both 1985 and 2000. In some ways pop culture hasn't changed much in the last 15 years.

In April 1985, Madonna had just finished her first movie, "Desperately Seeking Susan." (The Daily Universe reporter who reviewed the film said "Susan is the Holly Golightly of the 1980s.")

Also in 1985, Madonna's LP "Like a Virgin" hit No. 5 on the Billboard album chart, while her singles "Material Girl" and "Crazy For You" hit No. 5 and No. 3, respectively, on Billboard's Hot Singles list.

Within the past year and a half Madonna has released a movie, "Next Best Thing," and won her first Grammy for her "Ray of Light" album.

In April 1985, Collins' "One More Night" was No. 2 on Billboard's Hot Singles list, while his album "No Jacket Required" was the top-selling LP in the nation. He also won a Grammy that year for best male vocal performance.

In the past year and a half, Collins has released a top-selling album for Disney's animated hit movie "Tarzan." A song he penned for the movie also won an Academy Award for best original song.

In 1985, Turner was awarded a Grammy for her hit "What's Love Got to do with It?" while these days she's preparing for a big summer tour.

In 1985, "Return of the Jedi," the third "Star Wars" film at the time, was re-released to theaters and was planted firmly in the box office top ten list until the end of April. In 2000, "Stars Wars Episode I: The Phantom Menace" was re-released to theaters to steady profits, and is now flying off store shelves in video format.

But don't be fooled. Although some similarities are striking, the differences are equally remarkable.

April 1985 saw lifestyle headlines about Wham selling out a record-breaking concert in China, selling 12,000 tickets at $1.75 each.

Today, Wham is but a careless whisper rarely talked about in the music world. George Michael's teenage female admirers are gone. Michael has proclaimed different tendencies.

In 1985, Billy Joel was ecstatic about his marriage to model Christie Brinkley, according to a 1985 Associated Press article. Today, Joel is divorced, and Brinkley is with husband number four.

In 1985, primetime soap operas "Dynasty" and "Dallas" were battling it out for top Nielson ratings. Today, every network is stretching to compete with ABC's primetime game show "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?"

As far as music goes, the 15 years have been merciful. The music of 1985 is still relatively easy to get a hold of. In fact, all the top Billboard LPs from this week in April 1985 are available at Amazon.com.

Richard Ledford, manager of the Sam Goody music store at University Mall in Orem, said the store has been getting more requests for '80s music.

"We do get requests for '80s music ever since 'The Wedding Singer' came out," said Ledford. "It kind of brought more attention to it. And we also do get a lot of compilations of '80s hits."

However, Ledford also said the popularity of a lot of the big artists from 1985 has waned a bit in recent years. He did say that after a dry spell, Tina Turner, Bruce Springsteen and Phil Collins have all found success within the past few years.

"(Collins') 'You'll be in my Heart' was a huge contemporary hit. I hear that one at least once a day here in the mall," Ledford said.

But while the music from that era is readily accessible, some of the movies from the same era are a little harder to come by.

Of the top 10 box office movies from this week in April 1985, eight are easy to find — either for rent or purchase — at Blockbuster.com or Amazon.com. But "The Care Bears" and "The Last Dragon" are not available for purchase at either location, and neither can be rented at south Provo's Blockbuster or at Provo's Hollywood Video.

But the other two movies can still be found in Provo. "The Care Bears" is locally available to rent at Cougar Video and "The Last Dragon" can be rented at Provo's Plumtree Plaza Blockbuster.

Zach Jones, an employee at Cougar Video, said movies made in the 1980s have recently been rented more frequently.

He said Molly Ringwald movies like "The Breakfast Club," as well as John Cusack movies like "Say Anything" and "Better off Dead" are getting a lot more play.

started his environmental adjustment as a freshman by winning the WAC Championship with a three-day total of 208, including a 68 on the opening day.

"He's not intimidated by a lot of people," Brockbank said of Miller's freshman performance. "He feels like he can win every time he tees up."

The WAC title also started something else for Miller. He flossed the night before his victory, which has prompted him to adopt it as a ritual before each tournament.

"Not that I don't floss at other times," Miller said jokingly, "but I make sure the night before (tournaments)."

Brockbank said Miller wasn't highly touted as a junior golfer, so BYU was able to keep him away from bigger golf programs, luring him to a place with less-than-perfect golf weather.

And for four years, Miller and BYU have been a perfect match.

"My experience here has been a great experience," Miller said. "The education in the classroom and out on the course has been great."

Brockbank said part of Miller's contribution to the golf program has been his uncanny ability to remain well-rounded.

He works hard at school first, and then it's off to the fairways. Sometimes that's four hours of practice in a day, sometimes 10, Brockbank said. Miller said he expects this from both himself and his teammates.

As hard as they work as a team and with the raising expectations of a national ranking, Miller said his teammates are one of the reasons he's enjoyed his experience as a Cougar.

"We enjoy going to tournaments together," he said. "I can't really tell you what a difference that makes."

Pressure and expectations are nothing new to Miller. When your father won the U.S. Open (1973), the British Open (1976) and was named PGA Golfer of the Year (1974), it could put an inordinate amount of pressure on a young golfer.

But Miller said his father's status has been nothing but a benefit to his career.

"I look at it like a bonus," he said. "I don't see any downsides. I get instructions from one of the best."

Hoping to follow his father's professional path, Miller said his goal is to raise his game to the level of the PGA Tour.

"I think I'm headed in the right direction," Miller said. "I just have to keep up the pace I'm going.

"You just have to be patient after you turn pro."

Brockbank said he thinks Miller has the makeup as a golfer and as a person to move to the next level.

"He's a very stable young man. He knows what he wants and he goes about that everyday," he said.

But before he gets going as a pro, Miller said he still has things he wants to accomplish while in Cougar blue.

"It would be great to cap off my career with a national championship," Miller said.

BYU gymnasts set for finals

By James Randall
James@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

After barely qualifying for the tournament by squeaking into second place in the regional meet two weeks ago, the BYU women's gymnastics team is set to compete at the NCAA Championships beginning today in Boise, Idaho.

The Cougars are one of the 12 remaining teams that qualified for the Championships. The top two teams from each of the six regional meets advanced to this weekend's tournament.

BYU is one of the two qualifiers from the Region 6 meet two weeks ago in Athens, Ga. The Cougars placed second behind Georgia after slipping past Towson University to grab the final spot.

After three months of a regular season mentality where nothing matters but your score, to the post-season, where suddenly the only thing that matters is whom you beat, BYU head coach Brad Cattermole says his team is only worried about hitting its own routines.

"The difference in our team this year compared to some of our past teams is that we are not concerned with what other teams are at nationals or with what draw we have received," Cattermole said in a news release. "It has made for a more relaxed, confident group. We don't want to have to count any major breaks or falls. We are just concentrating on executing the routine and sticking the landing."

According to Cattermole, several freshmen have played key roles in the team's success this year, including Brooke Craig, Candace Cosgrave and Karen Nielsen.

All three will probably compete for the Cougars in the Championships this weekend.

The Cougars will begin their competition today at 1 p.m. in the first session of the team preliminary competition.

The other five teams competing in the first session are Utah, Georgia, Alabama, Oregon State and Louisiana State.

The second session, which will follow at 7 p.m., includes the other six qualifiers, UCLA, West Virginia, Penn State, Nebraska, Iowa State and Michigan.

BYU finished the year ranked No. 11 with a regional qualifying score of 195.585. This is the Cougars' seventh NCAA Championships in the last 12 years and their fifth appearance in the last seven years.

BYU is looking to improve upon its best-ever finish at No. 8 in 1991. This is the Cougars' first NCAA Championships appearance since 1998, when they finished No. 12.

The NCAA Championships begin today with team preliminary competition, team finals on Friday and individual finals on Saturday. The Cougars are 11-11 in team competition.

It's Time for Clarity.

A look back at 'season after' 1984 title

3 finish in 1985 remains a disappointment

e NewsNet Sports Editor

n asked to recall the 1984 football season, most fans imit that was the pinnacle. m, the world was flat and act dimensions of a football y a sports writer have dis- and analyzed BYU's per- ason when the Cougars won tional championship, but ave continued the story. it happened during the 'sea- er' anyway?

, there was life after the al title. Robbie Bosco still on in his senior season. was still in its Quarterback . And girls still d their hair.

hback to late t 1985.

J was screaming t even before the kickoff. But with reason. Many of the rs from the '84 returned, especially skill positions like o and David Mills end).

hen the Cougars ed, they found a n of media wanting e of the country's team.

he hype was huge," said). "There was media all over ace."

U defeated Boston College .

Next on the schedule was UCLA, which was then one of the better teams in the country. BYU felt if it could take the Bruins, the chances of a repeat would be feasible.

flash back

At Cougar Stadium, UCLA was lifeless behind the defensive efforts of Jason Buck, Kurt Gouveia and Leon White.

BYU scored with two-and-a- half minutes left in the game to lead by five. UCLA pulled out a last minute TD before the Cougars could get back on the board and upset BYU 27-24.

At that point, BYU turned its attention away from national attention and focused its goals on winning the Western Athletic Conference title.

In the next four games (Washington, Temple, Colorado State and San Diego State), BYU outscored its opponents 172-34, including a 28-0 Homecoming blowout against the Aztecs.

BYU was just starting to slip comfortably back into its winning ways. And UTEP, one of the worst teams in the country and the next team on BYU's schedule, looked about as intimidating as a plate of cookies and milk.

What should have been another blowout, ended up being BYU's biggest devastation of the year — a 23-16 loss.

"They just came ready to play and we ended up losing," Bosco said.

The following two games found BYU seeking revenge and attempting to recover what dignity was lost in the UTEP game.

The Cougars pulled together back-to-back massacres against Wyoming and Utah State, 59-0 and 44-0, respectively.

The Cougars managed to remain in the AP Top 25 poll, but things looked questionable when they went up against Air Force.

The Falcons were ranked No. 3 in the country and were undefeated in conference play.

BYU put themselves back on the board with a dramatic 28-21 come-from-behind victory.

"That Air Force team was one of the best I have ever seen in their history," Bosco said.

With the win, the WAC title was once again in BYU's grasp.

And after wins over Utah (38-28) and Hawaii (26-6) in the final two games of the season, BYU tied with Air Force for the WAC championship title.

That put the Cougars (11-2) in position for a bowl invitation — the Florida Citrus Bowl against Ohio State (8-3) on December 28.

In Orlando, Fla., the Buckeyes scored first on a 47-yard field goal, but the Cougars took a 7-3 halftime lead after Robbie Bosco rolled left, turned right and found wide receiver David Miles 38 yards out.

Bosco later got intercepted in the second half by Ohio State's Larry Kolic, who took it for a touchdown and a 10-7 Buckeye lead. BYU threatened twice, once with under four minutes to play and the other with three seconds left.

BYU finished the season No. 16 in the Associated Press poll.

At the end of the season, seven Cougars were named First Team All-WAC, including Mark Bellini, Trevor Molini, Lakei Heimuli. Dave Wright, Buck, Gouveia and White.

Bosco finished third in Heisman Trophy balloting in both his junior and senior seasons.

The mighty Mississippi rolls by as it did in those eventful days, but a fresh vibrancy fills the air on this part of its eastern shore.

You will not only live in the spirit of the new Nauvoo, you will probe in depth the history of this place hallowed by the work, devotion, and sacrifice of the early Saints. Your studies will also include field trips to Carthage, Kirtland, the Sacred Grove, the Hill Cumorah, Independence, Winter Quarters, and other centers of Church history. Latest temple dedicated in Fresno, Calif.

By Joe Hollenbaugh
hollenbaugh@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

While members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints contemplated their recent general conference and the historic dedication of the Palmyra New York Temple, nearly 10,000 LDS Church members attended the dedication of the Fresno California Temple.

One man was present for all three events.

President of the LDS Church, Gordon B. Hinckley, presided over general conference in Salt Lake City on April 1-2, dedicated the Palmyra Temple in upstate New York on April 6 and then flew to California to dedicate the Fresno Temple on April 9.

The Fresno Bee reported that 10,000 people attended the four dedicatory sessions. More than 600 attended each session within the temple, and another 1,700 viewed the ceremonies from an adjacent LDS meeting house.

President Hinckley was accompanied at the dedication by his wife Marjorie Pay Hinckley and by Elder M. Russell Ballard of the Quorum of the Twelve, said Jeff Boswell of the Fresno Temple dedication committee.

The Fresno California Temple will serve about 27,000 LDS Church members in eight stakes, and is the 78th operating LDS temple worldwide.

CIA, NSA deny spying on public

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The directors of the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency sought to assure Congress on Wednesday that ordinary Americans are not targets of high-tech government surveillance, either at home or abroad.

"We are not out there as a vacuum cleaner," said Air Force Lt. Gen. Michael V. Hayden, director of the super-secret NSA.

CIA Director George Tenet agreed. "Our targets are foreign," he asserted.

The two chiefs, testifying at a rare public hearing of the House Intelligence Committee, disputed reports suggesting the United States and its allies were using a satellite surveillance system to eavesdrop on private conversations of Americans and Europeans.

Meanwhile, other American intelligence officials confirmed an unrelated report that a Pentagon computer malfunction last summer hampered the government's ability to analyze photographs from spy satellites.

Those officials, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the computer problem at the National Imagery and Mapping Agency was eventually corrected — but not before presenting serious difficulties for several weeks.

Lack of multiple world crises and the ability to use slower back-up procedures kept it from becoming an even more serious problem, the officials said. The 1999 malfunction was first reported in the New York Times.

The congressional hearing focused on whether the privacy of Americans was being violated by the NSA in its surveillance programs.

In particular, lawmakers asked about the so-called "Echelon Project," said to be a joint satellite surveillance project among the United States, Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

U.S. intelligence officials have never publicly confirmed the existence of such a system, nor did Tenet or Hayden on Wednesday. But neither did they deny it.

Instead, they said that the NSA's surveillance capabilities were not being used to eavesdrop on ordinary Americans — or for industrial espionage to benefit U.S. companies.

The NSA specializes in electronic intelligence gathering through satellites, telephone intercepts and other methods.

Because the agency is so anonymous, most Americans don't have much notion of what it does, said committee Chairman Porter Goss, R-Fla.

"It is, then, understandable for them to become alarmed when they read or see media accounts that the NSA is unsupervised or out of control," Goss said. "Were I in their position, it would disturb me as well."

Later, Goss said he was satisfied that "our safeguards are in place and are working."

But Rep. Bob Barr, R-Ga., who has been pressing for more information on Echelon, said there remains "a whole host of questions that we need to go into."

The NSA is prohibited from spying on Americans — except under extraordinary situations that require express permission from either a special court or the attorney general.

"There are absolutely clear rules. They are well known. And they are well respected," Hayden testified.

He disputed published and broadcast reports, in Europe and elsewhere, that the United States was involved in the monitoring of e-mail and other communications of ordinary Americans.

The agency does not seek out such information, and if it acquires it unintentionally, it usually destroys it, Hayden said.

Separately, intelligence officials said the problem with the computer in the Pentagon's mapping agency last August made it hard for intelligence agencies to process photographs — even though satellites kept beaming the high-resolution images down to earth.

The officials said that they had to use back-up, low-tech measures, selecting for analysis only photographs that represented potential short-term threats to national security, such as North Korea's nuclear weapons program.

Other, longer-range projects, like analyzing crop changes in drug-growing regions, suffered as a result, the officials said.
